Some of the most common causes of excessive scratch include; Fleas fleas are extremely common in puppies and, often, overlook, mainly because they are small and, if the infest is mild enough, we do not see them often. Your veterinarian can prescribe medications to treat the underlying problems that contribute to the persistent arazon of your dog. As well as people with anxiety can bite the nails or turn their hair, dogs can also have physical answers at psychological discomfort. Your pet can respond to discomfort when scratching or lick on ISE's skin or temperature imbalances. These products are also usually expensive. However, antiparasitic drugs are more cheap and more commonly and can also be an adequate option. As a minimum, a dog who lives in the UK should be covered against fleas, the roundworm and had it. You should also consider coverage against ticks, the covers and lungan, depending on your location and lifestyle. If some red spots appear, it has the confirmation of the presence of the dirt of the flea and, therefore, the fleas. However, regardless of whether your dog has fleas or not, you should treat them regularly with an appropriate product; Continue reading and we will go through the different options below. Learn more here: How can I know if my puppy has fleas? One of the first sorts that your dog has a problem could be the development of a À € à stain ", a red area, hollow and irritated that arises from persistent chewing, licking, scratching or rubbing . Dogs with scabies generally have a certain degree of hair loss, as well as mild to moderate itching. It is also necessary to treat other animals of the house. Change food. Because compulsive behaviors can cause serious damage and affect the quality of life of your dog, it is important to do everything possible to prevent your dog from chewing, lick or scraping too much. In addition, its veterinarian may recommend the use of typical or surviving antibiotics, steroids or anti-itching products to treat existing hot spots or cutaneous infections. Prefecture of behavior. Have you had something with your dog licking your paw without stopping? Your veterinarian may recommend a special diet if this seems to be the case. A variety of factors, including winter climate and fatty acid deficiencies, can cause drying in dogs. It can be manifested in scratching, licking or chewing behaviors that can cause severe damaged damage. In your final ingenuity about your dog biting your own queue? If you think you are uncomfortable, imagine how your dog feels. Scratching compulsive, lick, and chewing behaviors are quite common in dogs and have a variety of causes. If food allergies are making your dog itching, the elimination of possible triggers (such as meat or wheat) can make a big difference. Chewing or compulsively lick can also be a response to orthopedic problems, including arthritis and hip dysplasia.Parasites. It can also be useful to train your dog to chew toys or bones to relieve stress as a replacement of inappropriate chew or lick behaviors.
